

Conocer - February 2018 Monarch Trip

Precaution:

When we climb up the mountain side to the wintering grounds of the Monarch – it really is a climb! The trail, La Sierra Chincua, is rocky and steep. The final altitude is over 7,500 feet above sea level. This is not a “cake-walk.” All ages have participated, but if you have any difficulty with breathing, heart or balance problems, we advise you to consult your doctor and use extreme caution in considering this journey. There are horses available for part of the journey, but there is at least a 1 to 3 mile walk (it varies every year depending on where the colonies settle) to the final destination of the butterflies, where the horses do not travel to.
